NEXUS

In a world that was taking us faster and faster, suddenly, we were forced to stop and change our way of understanding life.

Spaces to feel

We value more the spaces that we consider ours, both outside and inside our homes, where wellbeing and health have become the most important elements.

At home we surround ourselves not only with habitable ambiences, but also with lived and felt spaces.

Ultimately, spaces that help our wellbeing.

All this has accelerated decor trends but, specially, it has made us perceive their influence in our lives much more intensely.

In Decotec, we have created a trend concept where we analyze and confront these trends with the way we experience them.

This way of understanding our relationship with spaces is built on three main concepts.

Personal: Places that talk about us, what we are and where we come from.

Natural: We need to create spaces to engage with nature, both indoors and outdoors.

Essential: Spots where we find the balance that enables us to recharge and face the everyday challenges.

P e r s o n a l

When we look around, we seek elements that connect with our memory, what we are and where we come from.

Almost without realizing,
the space that surrounds us
reflects our personality
and talks about us
and our tastes.
Colors, shapes and decoration let go scraps
of our personality.

Each part of our home is the reflection of our world, that shows us as we are and, at the same time, allow us to be as we are.

After all this time away from the outside, we need to get out, breath and merge with nature. We also look for that connection inside our homes.

We find it in the places where natural is protagonist.

That is why nature has gained spaces outside and inside our homes, and we are more conscious of what it means.

Now more than ever, we need to find times to relax, repair and concentrate in ourselves.

Our home has become the place to find these moments, a shelter in which we isolate from exterior noise and move away from everything that surrounds us.

Spots at home that become small sanctuaries, free of unnecessary ornaments, where the essential reigns and where objects and surfaces transmit feelings of quietness, tranquility and calmness.
